Peace Charity Honours Mo Mowlam

This Friday the educational peace charity set up after the IRA bombing of Warrington, which killed the two boys after whom it is named, will honour the memory of Mo Mowlam.

The Tim Parry Johnathan Ball Trust, which is based at the £3million purpose-built 'Peace Centre' in Warrington, will be naming its residential lounge after the former Northern Ireland Secretary.

Speaking of the event, founder Wendy Parry said: "Mo did so much in our early days to help Colin and I to find not only the finances but also the will to pursue our dream of building a dedicated and unique Centre for young people everywhere who are at risk of violent conflict. Mo shared our belief that such a Centre was vitally important in today's dangerous world, in helping improve the lives of such young people. She shared the belief that this was the most appropriate legacy for Tim and Johnathan to leave behind in their memory.

"We are delighted that Mo's husband, Jon Norton will be our Chief Guest of Honour and will personally open the refurbished and re-named room."
