One World Day at the Warrington Peace Centre 27 April 2006

Fairness, equality, diversity, tolerance, inclusion and participation all fit easily into a discussion of one world issues. This is why a One World Day is useful for promoting our programmes, networking with like minded people, and bringing organisations sympathetic to our aims and objectives into our magnificent facility.

Over 60 participants will be present including 30 British Council International Scholars from across the globe. They will take part in a carousel of active workshops delivered by The Trust and The British Red Cross.

There will be a display area which will feature The British Council, Children for Peace, The Red Cross and The International Voluntary Service.

The day will begin at 10.30am with an address by Colin Parry who tragically lost his son Tim in the 1993 bombing of Warrington town centre.

This is a joint project with The British Council.
